The Ideal Group

we lie back and compare

Grapevine, April 1951, Vol. 7 No. 11

MANY of us who arrive at some degree of sobriety are inclined to set up in our minds an ideal picture of the AA group or movement. We roll this morsel over our tongues while we lie back and compare this perfect picture with our own group.

We think what a fine thing it would be if the meetings started on time and closed the same way. And wouldn't it be swell if the women in the group didn't gossip about each other. And while we warm up to the subject, why didn't anybody visit me or telephone while I was sick? In the Ideal Group, there would be a committee for that sort of thing. Yes, and for greeting newcomers too! It's a shame the way a new man stands around after the meeting and nobody talks to him or invites him to the Tap for coffee with the gang. And another thing--isn't it a shame that so many fine good-hearted fellows have been "kicking the Program around" lately? They certainly don't set a very good example for the newcomers when they spoil three or four years sobriety with a week's drunk. Also it's too bad that the group falls down on its pledge to Intergroup and the General Service Office. And let's do something about having some decent coffee and cake instead of the lousy doughnuts our social secretary provides. Yakkety, yakkety, blah blah blah!!!

Why don't we get wise to ourselves? What on earth do we expect? Here is a band of ex-drunks with most of their life-long habits turned inside out, most of them highly neurotic, prejudiced and egotistical, yet trying to focus a beam of light on their own character defects, trying in short, to change their lives. Trying to turn their lives and wills over to God as each one understands him. Trying, that's all.

Let's be tolerant of each other. We must expect a great deal of irrational thinking and screwy behavior. It's all part of the act. And it isn't nearly as important or serious as we imagine. The most impossible situation seldom causes any real or lasting harm to the group. The most unlikely new secretary turns out after a few weeks to be doing a fairly good job, perhaps a shade better than the last one.

We do our best to make our group grow and expand and then when it does grow, it's very size irritates us. Then we compare the big group with what it used to be when it was small and compact. Every member used to have a real and constant interest in the other members. Now the group has grown and a bunch of newcomers are in the drivers seat. Why, when we go to a meeting, we don't even know half the people present! Well, what of it? You say we don't seem to get as much out of it as we used to. Maybe we don't need as much help now. We have our sobriety now. Perhaps what we need now is to help others. Are we doing it? Are we attending open and closed meetings regularly? How few of us after three or four years of sobriety are putting one tenth as much into AA as we did at first. It shouldn't be necessary to repeat that we get out of AA just what we put into it, but we forget it. So basically the fault lies in the very people who are the most critical. They are the ones who are unconsciously hurting the morale of the group with their constant criticism and their inconstant attendance at meetings, their feeble help to others.

Let's forget this Ideal Group and get back with our own group, first attending the meetings, second, speaking when asked, third, doing 12th Step work. If we hope to see the meetings start on time, let's set an example by being there on time. If we dislike gossip, let's avoid it like the plague ourselves. If we like to be visited when sick, let's keep a list of the sick in our group and do a little calling and visiting ourselves. And so on down the list.

All any of us can do is to try to be the sort of a member we would expect to find in the Ideal Group, shaking hands with the newcomer and introducing him around, speaking at other groups, making our own group a pleasure and our own lives a little more perfect.

I am adding some fantasy to a realistic setting. Sitting in an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting that I regularly attend, made up of 7 regular members that work together as a group to each share duties in the work that it takes to have a meeting on a regular basis. Mutual respect has been gained and friendship is extensive. Our common goal is keep one another sober and to carry the message to other alcoholics that suffer. A new person comes in and sits at the table at the beginning of the meeting.

I am thinking of how and if, to communicate with this person. By saying the wrong things could possibly offend him and he will never come back to another AA meeting in his life and possibly drink himself to death, or I could have something to share with him from my own experience that attracts him to continue to try the way of AA and see him develop into a clean and mature man that fits into society, contributing and developing in a manner that others never would think possible.

According to Myers-Briggs, I am an ESTJ *. (Focused externally, deal with things rationally and logically). I see a man dressed in ragged yet clean clothes; his eyes are blood-shot, his hands trembling as if he hasn't had a drink in awhile, but needs one. I look for a sign of any kind of smile or gleam of gratitude that he is content about where he is. What brought him to us? Why would he want to stay?

The meeting begins with a reading about HOW it WORKS. Beginning with the words of "Rarely have we seen a person fail that has thoroughly followed our path... I see a gleam in his eye, or perhaps a glimmer of hope that indicates that he is desperate to find a pathway to a better life. What is his motive to coming to our meeting? I wonder, as other group members do, if sharing our stories of our defeat and agony from our past is worth it. I look desperately for signs all through the meeting, as to how to approach this man after the meeting. What style of communication is going to speak to him? I didn't see him show any signs of disbelief when we read about "turning our lives over to the care of God". He seemed fascinated when a fellow member shared about how his life used to be as a drunk and how he found this meeting and that by following the simple program, and now his life is tremendously better, which continues to look bright. (Hope)

After the meeting we all took turns talking to the man and he agreed to keep coming back. As I observed the communication of each man toward the new-comer, I found that he had a scientific form of looking at things. From then on I tried to communicate to him in a fashion that was more explanatory, using symbolic terms being relatively simple about a spiritual program that not only turns our life but our will over to God that we can not see. The group membership has now grown to 8.
